

A semiconductor photodetection device includes a photodetection layer formed of an alternate and repetitive stacking of an optical absorption layer
5 accumulating therein a compressive strain and a stress-compensating layer accumulating therein a compensating tensile strain, wherein the optical absorption layer has a thickness larger than a thickness of the stress-compensating layer.

10